Difference between Art and Culture

Art

Art is the creative expression of one's experiences, emotions and other qualities

Art is one aspect of culture

Art is influenced heavily by culture and is born as a by-product of culture, reflecting some of its customs, beliefs, and values.

Culture

It comprises a wide variety of human behaviours

The evolved human capacity to act creatively and imaginatively and represent and classify experiences with symbols

Culture is the ensemble of social forms, material traits, customary beliefs, and other human phenomena that cannot be directly attributed to a genetic inheritance of a religious, racial, or social group.

- Also in ancient India, the arts were not separated, as they unfortunately are today the architect; the sculptor and the painter were often one man.

Qualities of Indian Artists

Image of Indian Artists

- If the Greeks excelled in the portrayal of the physical charm of the human body, the Egyptians in the grandeur of their pyramids and the Chinese in the beauty of their landscapes, the Indians were unsurpassed in transmitting the spiritual contents into their plastic forms embodying the high ideals and the common beliefs of the people.
- Indian artists visualized the qualities of various gods and goddesses as mentioned in their scriptures and infused these qualities into their images whose proportions they based on the idealized figures of man and woman.
- There were two qualities about which the Indian artists cared more than about anything else, namely, a feeling for volume and vivid representation, even at the risk of sacrificing, at times, anatomical truth or perspective.
- Indian art is a treasure house of ancient contemporary life, its faiths and beliefs, customs and manners.
- We can divide the subject in three parts for our convenience.
